

H. C. L. NERBY SOLVED

BY HANS FISHERMAN

Law Takes Hand and He'll Fish No More.

Abraham Beach is the "fishiest" man in town—by necessity, not by profession. Last week, Beach, who is self out of a job, with a wife and several children to feed, so he hired a boat and started to dip-shad in the river, thinking that if he couldn't buy groceries he could at least catch fish and eat them. He was arrested.

Beach thought over his predicament and wondered where he would get money to pay his fine. He was almost to fish some more and sell the fish to pay the law. He was arrested again.

Now, with two fines on him, he still believed his salvation lay in the river. Once more he dipped for shad, and was arrested a third time. What was the law when a man and his family are hungry? mused Abraham. In police court yesterday morning Judge Pugh reminded him that the fishing is still good at Occoquan.

"But I have a family and a job in sight," protested Beach. He proved that to be true, and promised the court to forget where the Potomac River was, and not to violate the fishing laws again. He was put on probation.

Naughty, Charlotte, and Very Rude! She sat in the "movies" watching the gallant soldier hero rescue the heroine from the clutches of the villain. Charlotte Willis did, and wished that it was she. The show over, she wandered forth, and almost in front of her was a natural guardman, as she called him, and asked to see the image of the hero in the picture. Charlotte eyed him just as other movie eye their heroes, and she spoke to her.

But, alas, Charlotte had a hubby and several little ones. The soldier was very shocked to hear this sad news, and while he was telling Charlotte about his hard luck in the matter, friend husband walked up and demanded an explanation. It was not forthcoming, and he ordered his errand boy to get a policeman. When the policeman arrived, Charlotte's hubby upbraided her severely. Charlotte, becoming very nervous, hurried to a pitcher at her husband. It didn't hurt him much, but a perfectly good $1.25 pitcher was smashed into a thousand pieces.

So the trouble was dragged into police court yesterday morning, and Charlotte will have to scrape up $20 or go to Occoquan.

The Passing of Alexander. Judge, I want to go to Occoquan," said Alexander Griffith. The court looked around at this extraordinary request, somewhat puzzled. Most of the prisoners try all sorts of antics to get out of the place, but to go to Occoquan is a new one. "All right, replied the court, "if you want to stay in the liquor store for thirty days, I think I can oblige you."

Alexander had walked into the police station Friday and asked to be put away. No one knew where he came from and could find no charge to lay against him. At his request, he was brought up in Police Court and put in storage for a month to allow the liquor to get out of his system.

Impulsive Mister Keys. Impulsiveness almost cost Phillip Keys his life, and a fine for violating the food and drug laws. A few days ago Keys bought some bichloride of mercury to wash an injured hand. He dissolved one of the tablets in a glass of water, and somehow or another, instead of bathing his hand in it, used it internally. Key's employer testified that once before in a similar exhibition of impulsiveness the man had swallowed a cup of lye from a coffee pot, thinking it was coffee.

What the court wanted to know was why Key's didn't have discernment enough to inform the hospital authorities that he took the drug by mistake, and not allow himself to be brought into court on a charge of obtaining a deadly poison on false pretenses. Fortunately, he did not drink enough of the drug to kill him. The court gave him the benefit of the doubt and dismissed the case.

Patrick Henry Wants To Be Called Henry Patrick Henry McGurgan, named after the famous statesman, who said "Give me liberty or give me death," yesterday asked the District Supreme Court to rid him of this famous name and allow him to use the name of Harry Cosgray instead. Cosgray was the name of McGurgan's mother's first husband, and he has been called Cosgray all his life.

A few months ago McGurgan got married, and to keep matters from being tangled up legally he wants the court to change his name to the one he likes best, and the one that every one knows him by.

BONDS TO PAY HOTEL BILLS. Mr. A. Conrad Ekholm, proprietor of the Monticello, Atlantic City, in announcing that liberty bonds will be accepted by him the same as any other medium of Uncle Sam's currency, stated: "I have two distinct reasons for making this offer. First, I believe all American business men should do all they can to encourage as many as possible to purchase liberty bonds. There are, however, many who refrain from buying on account of having to use the money for every-day necessities. To render the best service to the community and our nation we must keep in good physical condition. What will do more to build up a run-down physical condition and promote good health than a visit to Atlantic City? My second reason is that I believe such propositions will help educate the public into realizing that liberty bonds are not only safest for permanent investment, but can be utilized as a medium of exchange as well."
